. . . offers a comprehensive and detailed guide to lighting for production photography. For it provides advice on all aspects of lighting, from the technical preparation, to post-production techniques. Light sets are provided for 35mm, medium format and digital cameras. . . Interiors were all but the only thing the author didn't cover. If your budget permits this book is probably the easiest starting point for learning the basics of a good lighting setup. Today the photo of the year was an image of one of the children born in Rachis. Stunning images (for the most part) of a little girl (who was 3) and her family at the beach. Avery wanted to do something special for his friends birthday, so asked me to take a photo of his friends, he set me up with the basics of the lighting and I got it done. First day of the wedding of Shanti and Kavya, both girls had long dark hair and I had to add some light to bring out the highlights and reduce the grey in the face. This is the photo from that shoot. A 'before' of a full body shot, and then a close-up of a flower shoot. A very simple portraiture shoot, just some photos of a family at home. This was my attempt at getting some humour into the photos. The family was very happy with the results. This was a 'how-to' to get up and running with a family. It took me two days to do. A 'how-to' on a family shoot. I tried to highlight the parents' bond and then the children's rapport. A freelance project, with a real wedding. Here's a peek of a few of the images I took. A senior portrait of a young man with his wife. I took the portraits in a remote area, so I used a flash and available light to get the image. A portrait of a lady that I'm producing. I am planning to combine the image with a graduation image of her and her family. An images of the young couple's wedding anniversary. These images are of the little boy after he was born. A staged portrait with a flower. This was a fun, easy shoot. A wedding with a nice couple. Here's a sample of the images I captured. A pre-w
